Notes from the Headteacher's Study

Time to evaluate and almost time to celebrate

One of the best parts of my job as Headteacher is to go and observe lessons across the school and celebrate the great learning taking place, as well as have conversations about sharpening elements. This involves watching the input, seeing how the teacher, teaching assistant and children all interact and engage and see the work that is prided as a result. So far I have been into 1Sharman, 2Windsor, 4Lennon, 5Hawking, 5Turing, 6Anning and 6Darwin. Next week I have the pleasure of EYFS, 2Churchill and Year 3. I have been very impressed with some many elements of our Teaching and Learning and most of all, with the way the children have come to chat to me about their books. They have been able to explain their new learning but also give opinions and link things together. I have observed: English Reading, English Writing, Religious Education, Mathematics and PSHE.

We are quickly approaching Christmas! Within this Newsletter I have put together all the dates, including new events, so you have the plan to hand. Children are continuing with a full curriculum, but staff have incorporated singing and drama into their lessons, ready to add some sparkle and shine during our last couple of weeks. Performance is high up on the USP of King's Northway, and we can't wait to share Christmas with you.
